Harrods once sold lions in their shop in London. In 1969 two Australians who lived in London bought one and took it home to their flat. They called it Christian. Lions aren't dirty animals and they can live happily in a flat. Christian liked to play and the two men played with him. Even as a young lion he bit hard while he was playing, but the two men always played carefully and they still have all their fingers! Lions are usually dangerous, but the men believed that Christian was safe and they walked him in Hyde Park. But they were always careful and made sure that he was not hungry when they went out. When he was one year old, Christian was already a large lion and the Australians decided that London was not a good place for him any more. So they took him to Africa and some animal experts helped him to live alone. Christian learnt well and a few years later, when the Australians visited him in his new home, he already had his own family.
